Barbara Kennedy : Deleuze and Cinema: The Aesthetics of Sensation (Deleuze Connections) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Deleuze and Cinema: The Aesthetics of Sensation (Deleuze Connections):

This provocative study forges new and creative connections between Deleuzian philosophy and contemporary film studies. When watching films we respond to the visual elements of colour, movement, rhythm and sensation through our bodies as well as our minds. Barbara Kennedy shows how we can understand this response as an 'aesthetics of sensation', which in turn can begin to explain the experience of the spectator, who feels the film as an event. Through discussions of Orlando, The English Patient, Romeo and Juliet, Strange Days and Leon, this subtle and powerful book reintroduces debates about film as an art form and the place of film theory within our aesthetic sensibilities.

Kennedy treats the artistry of cinema in a fresh and engaging way. (Choice) A superb foray into the emergent area of Deleuzian inspired film-philosophy. (Scope) About the Author Barbara Kennedy is Senior Lecturer in Film and Cultural Studies at the University of Staffordshire
