Grahame Smith : Dickens and the dream of cinema before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Dickens and the dream of cinema:

An original blending of literary and film studies which seeks to dissolve barriers between the two disciplines. Offers a new reading of Dickens from the perspective of film, technology and visibility. Proposes a new reading of the emergence of film in the light of social and industrial transformations. Suggests that Dickens was one of the forces which contributed to the appearance of film towards the end of the nineteenth century.
