Learning in a flash
By Liz Evans
I think I was part of the generation that, if your parents could afford it, you had to learn an instrument. My mother picked the piano. I ending up being ok at it but I never really excelled. My 10 year old has asked Santa for a keyboard for Christmas. Little does she know I already have one. The next thing shes going to ask for are lessons. Thats going to be a little harder to come by so I was thinking that I could start to teach her myself. The problem is, I was her age the last time I played. I picked up this book in hopes that it would trigger my brain. Not only did it do that but it also has given me some excellent reference material when it comes to teaching her! I love that it was broken into the basics without dumbing it down. It seems to be written for the adult learner and that suits me just fine. I cant wait to get started with her!

A very comprehensive guide for beginners
By Lisa Court
We have inherited a grand piano from my great grandmother and I always loved listening to other people play. My parents got me a piano teacher when I was about 7, but the only song Ive managed to learn properly was Hey Jude. As I grew older I wished I could play because every time I sat at the piano I had an overwhelming feeling of peace and serenity. After I bought this book everybody was amazed by my fast progress. I believe in the beginning my practicing was pretty annoying but my family was kind enough not to mention it :) I am still far from perfect and there are still many things in this book I still have to follow up on, but now playing the piano has become a real pleasure, for me and I believe for my audience as well. If you want to learn playing the piano by yourself, Marcus Johnson's guide is a great start.
